What are cookies and how do we use them?

Cookies are small text files that websites put on your computer so the site can remember who you are. They contain a unique, but anonymous, identifier, which is usually a string of letters or numbers.

If you were given a choice when you entered our site whether to accept or decline cookies and you failed to select one of the options, by continuing to use the site you agree to our use of cookies. If you declined cookies, we switched off all cookies except for the functional cookies that are essential for the site to run (including a cookie which tells us that you have made this choice).

You can block all cookies (including functional cookies) by activating the setting on your browser that allows you to refuse the setting of cookies. However, if you do this you may not be able to access some parts of our site. You can find more information about enabling and disabling cookies at www.allaboutcookies.org.

The cookies we use are from Google Analytics: These enable us to estimate our audience size and usage pattern, and to recognise your IP address, operating system and browser type. For more information click here. Using these cookies helps us to improve the way our website works, for example, by ensuring that users are finding what they are looking for easily. These cookies do not personally identify any individual user. These are usually third party cookies, which we use to deliver a better user experience.
